Reflections on a city

10th Anniversary Exhibition

Shimmering vistas & impressions of Edinburgh

'Reflections on a city' is Jamie Primrose's 10th Anniversary Exhibition – a celebration of a decade living and working as a professional artist in Edinburgh since 2003, when he returned home to the Scottish capital from London and abroad. This showcase also marks exactly 10 years to the month since the Edinburgh-born painter's very first solo exhibition in the city at The Traverse back in November 2003.

Following no less than 25 solo collections in Edinburgh and London since then due to his prolific creative development, with past sell-out exhibitions to his name, this is the acclaimed contemporary Scottish artist's largest ever new body of work to date – with over 100 atmospheric new oils and Indian inks of Edinburgh. The exhibition is taking place at Dovecot Studios – the unique leading contemporary arts venue, renowned for its collaborations with some of the world's finest contemporary artists.

Although he has travelled extensively in the past and captured destinations further afield in his paintings, Primrose is best known for his Edinburgh artworks – as he is continually inspired by the city he grew up in and where he now lives once again. This extensive major body of work celebrates his passion for the Scottish capital – its unique light and majestic sculptural landscape. It explores his emotional relationship with city locations from his past or present, offering an evocative statement as he captures the transient nature of light from the sky onto land and water. Focusing primarily on autumnal and winter light at its most dramatic – sunrise and sunset, his works evoke a tranquil, ethereal quality as he emphasises luminosity and atmosphere.

Contemporary Scottish Artist

'Reflections on a city'

The Scottish capital represents a strong element of who I used to be, who I have become and it is firmly ingrained in my psyche. I am continually drawn to capturing a timeless view of the majestic, historic city I grew up in as a child – whilst also discovering new aspects, vistas and learning more about myself all the time. In my work I am constantly exploring the juxtaposition of dark, haunting moodiness and uplifting, shimmering light through my usage of medium and technique. With this collection my aim was to reflect on my childhood past, and my present in Edinburgh, pausing briefly to mark ten years back in the city, before I move forward with fresh ideas for the next decade of painting.

Edinburgh & my journey

My passion for Edinburgh has never faltered. Whilst growing up in Trinity, I explored and loved the surrounding city with its contrasts – light and shade, Old and New Town, crags and parklands – which I often sketched as a child. Following school, I left to venture slightly further afield to study Fine Art at Newcastle University. By the time I had finished my degree I was preoccupied (like most of my contemporaries) with a need for travel and experience, so I took time away from my paintbrushes – firstly travelling around the world and then working in London.

Nine years passed by and I suddenly had an inner urge to return home to become an artist, with a visceral need to create again. This epiphany was fuelled by a period of travel in Central and South America, where the awe-inspiring light and contrasting landscapes had rekindled and reawakened my passion for painting.

I was also drawn back home by past memories and reflections on Edinburgh's unique light and atmosphere, the 'four seasons in a day,' which are still so inspiring to me. In the past I had always been motivated by the city's hazy early morning winter mist, the colourful transition from late afternoon towards sunset and the quiet eeriness of dusk. I knew I wanted to rediscover the city and made the life-defining decision to return home to begin my artistic journey again. That was a decade ago and since then painting has become my life, my love and my living too. Edinburgh continues to have a huge influence on me – as there is so much inspiration right on my doorstep.

Locations in my work

In this new body of work I am reflecting on my relationship with 'Auld Reekie'. I revisit and capture familiar locations, which uncover a rich depth of meaning and sense of awareness from my past or present. Some of these places are well-known iconic views, while others are hidden lesser-known vistas – they are all very personal to me.

In my paintings I am expressing my emotional response to these locations. From my past I remember clearly the spires and darkness of the majestic Old Town, the elegant grandeur of The New Town and parts of Stockbridge – where I grew up and went to school. Childhood emotions return with memories of chasing squirrels and feeding ducks in The Botanics, walking my dog in Inverleith Park around the pond and scuffing my feet while following the Water of Leith path to the Modern Art Gallery. I also vividly recall gazing at the towering New Town mansions overlooking The Dean Village, watching the reflections on The Shore with my Grandpa (a very proud Leither), then sledging down Arthur's Seat in the sparkling snow and being mesmerised by the haze of colours in the late afternoon sky stretching far beyond the magnificent city below.

Over the past decade since being back in Edinburgh again, I have loved rediscovering these locations by myself and with my young family, but I've also explored new areas, which keep me excited, energised and inspired. I watch ethereal light shadows through the trees and ever-changing patterns of colour on The Meadows throughout the seasons on my daily journey to and from my Stockbridge studio from my home in Marchmont. I take in the idyllic stillness of The Union Canal from Fountainbridge to Polwarth where I often walk. I also often revisit the hilltops of Arthur's Seat, Calton Hill and Blackford Hill – to marvel at the breathtaking skyline vistas and gain my own perspective of the 'Athens of The North.'

The inspiration & process

As well as being drawn to specific Edinburgh locations, I have an obsession for the fleeting nature of light. I aim to encapsulate the city's unique light and shade on its landscapes and waterscapes in the development of my work, whilst capturing and expressing luminosity and atmosphere.

I find that the quality of light is best in autumn and winter – the water glistens brightly, the trees are sculptural, the clouds evocative, the buildings are cold, stark structures in front of vibrant transitory skies beyond. In front of me rich warm emerald hues turn to winter light dancing onto snow. I take a series of photos of the same vistas or motifs at different times of the day and over many days. I get lost in the varying light and sky formations, my thoughts, reflections and ideas about each location.

I also aim to capture that special, fleeting, single moment in time or 'snapshot' from dawn onwards and from sunset to sundown, at the most dramatic and transient times of the day when the light is changing rapidly. It is my emotional response to and my perception of the relationship between the light in the sky, the myriad of colours, the atmosphere, architecture, landscape or water – which I am conveying at that very moment. Sometimes my feelings are communicated through a brilliant shaft of light streaming through the clouds, the eerie calm before a storm or the very last glimmer of light before twilight.

Whilst concentrating on light and shade and the transition of these two contrasting seasons, motifs in my work include vast skylines beyond the city's bold silhouette, a closer architectural perspective on individual streets or my keen interest in the more natural elements of the city's open spaces, parklands, shimmering lochs and waterways. To me, each artwork is a historical snapshot as I leave out most elements of modern life (except the architecture which is constantly evolving). I want what is happening to the light, sky, land, water and other natural elements to come alive and shine forth.

I love to experiment with mark making and layering of Indian ink and white acrylic washes in my monochrome works on paper. I often use these drawings as initial reference points for my oil paintings – together with a series of photographs of the same scene taken over a time lapse. For my oils I start off working with thick textured impasto, gradually building up with multi-layers of thinner translucent glazes over the top of the thicker oils. In the studio I work on one series of artworks at a time in a day – with each piece playing off one another.

Whilst letting those dry for a few days I start a further series...and so on, going back to rework the first... until the entire collection evolves over many months. I have created this body of work with the gallery spaces at Dovecot Studios never far from my mind...

10th Anniversary collection & exhibition

The concept and thinking behind my 10th Anniversary collection and exhibition at Dovecot Studios started to evolve a couple of years ago – with initial ideas, taking photographic research and drawing sketches. Most of these pieces have then been painted in my studio over the past nine months. Although I capture many destinations further afield, including France, Italy, London and the Scottish East and West coasts, I wanted to mark a decade of living and working in the city as a professional artist in some way and a new body of work about my home just felt right. I was also keen to challenge myself to create a series of larger-scale pieces than I had ever done before and Dovecot Studios has given me that opportunity, with its beautiful vast, light spaces.

These large format paintings act as key focal points in the North & South Galleries within their different series, which are curated by theme, motif, or in the most part by location. Over the following pages I have also grouped my artworks by location – on their own each offers an evocative snapshot from my past or present and collectively they depict a very personal, yet timeless journey through the Scottish capital's landscape... which I hope you will enjoy.

Biography

Jamie Primrose

Jamie Primrose was born in Edinburgh in 1972. He attended the Edinburgh Academy where he won first prize for his art in the SCIS Exhibition of Independent Schools. He then attained a BA Honours in Fine Art at The University of Newcastle Upon Tyne (1990-1994).

For the next few years Primrose travelled around the world, visiting countries including the USA, Canada, French Polynesia, Australia, New Zealand, Singapore, Malaysia, Thailand and Hong Kong. On returning to the UK in 1996 he moved to London and worked for the next six years – firstly in the travel industry as a Senior Travel Consultant for Trailfinders and latterly, in more creative roles as a Senior Account Manager at Getty Images and in Creative Acquisitions at Digital Vision Picture Library.

In 2002, Primrose left London for a trip to Central and South America, visiting countries such as Mexico, Guatemala, Belize, Costa Roca, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, Paraguay, Argentina and Brazil. Inspired by the light and landscapes on his travels and with a calling back home to Edinburgh, he returned to the Scottish capital in 2003, intent on becoming a full-time artist – although having not painted for almost a decade since leaving university in 1994.

Since then he has achieved outstanding success with over 25 solo collections in Edinburgh and London and sell-out exhibitions – establishing himself as one of the UK's most prominent landscape artists and exciting artistic talents. In 2006 he was chosen as one of Scotland on Sunday's 'rising stars' and in 2007 he was shortlisted for the prestigious Jolomo Award for his Scottish landscape paintings, the same year as launching his own limited edition prints collection. With an ever-growing UK and international clientele, Primrose's artworks can be seen in many exclusive private and corporate collections worldwide and his sought-after work has received critical acclaim (see back cover).

“As a professional artist I feel it’s important to constantly develop creatively, explore, experiment and to hone my craft. I like to challenge myself in a diversity of locations, media and motifs. My aim is to maintain honesty, integrity and passion in my work – which is constantly evolving. This is deep-rooted in the traditional forms of drawing and painting and I take inspiration from the past – in particular artists such as Whistler, Turner, Monet and the colourist tradition of rich Scottish landscape painting.” Jamie Primrose
